The South American Division of the Seventh Day Adventist Church:

1. Reaffirms that the issue of women’s ordination was openly discussed in its Biblical Research Committee (BRC-SAD), through the presentation of academic papers and the analysis of the biblical text and its related theological issues, in order to elaborate this position. The different opinions on the subject had ample opportunity to be expressed;

2. Reaffirms, on the basis of the biblical teaching, the equality of men and women, and the great relevance of the role of women in the life of the church;

3. Reaffirms that in its territory, women are active members and leaders in different areas of the life of the local church as well as in the denomination structure;

4. Recognizes women’s valuable contribution to the leadership of the Church and to the fulfillment of the Gospel mission;

5. Reaffirms its commitment to preserve the unity of the Church, to study, to dialogue and to decide together with the worldwide Church on the best paths to be followed;

6. Reaffirms its position on the subject of women’s ordination and its respect for the opinion of the other Divisions, and that the SAD will support the decision which will be made by the worldwide Church.

The Biblical Research Committee of the South American Division (BRC-SAD) met on the 13th and 14th of November 2013 to discuss the papers presented at the TOSC meeting of last July, and to hear three new papers presented by its own theologians. It also took into consideration other pertinent material that was sent for its appreciation by different Adventist scholars or that were publically available in the official site of the General Conference. A consensus was reached by the majority of its members, which was later presented and voted by the Administrative Board of the Division.

The basic points of the consensus are:

1. According to Genesis 1 and 2, man and woman were created in God’s image, ontologically equal, but with different roles, this being reiterated throughout all the Scriptures.

   The first two chapters of the Bible clearly point out to the full equality between man and woman in God’s intentional will and creative action. Both man and woman were created at the image and the likeness of God, and received the divine blessing with its injunction to multiply, fill the Earth and rule over it and its creatures (Gen 1:26-28). The woman was an ‘ezer k’negdo (“a helper corresponding to him”), a companion in full standing with man, someone equal to him (Gen 2:18, 20). God created her from a rib taken out of Adam, therefore she was bone of his bones and flesh of his flesh, a true kin to him (Gen 2:21-23). The image of the rib (tsela’) taken from the side of man specifically conveys the idea of standing at the side of, a partnership of equal beings (see EGW, PP, 46). The terms ‘ish (“man”) and ‘ishah (“woman”) in Gen 2:23 point to the fact that they were only different in gender.

Finally, the unity of the couple as a basar échad (“one flesh”), in Gen 2:24, also speaks of their equality and image of God, for He is échad (“One”, Deut 6:4).

Genesis 1 and 2 additionally present a role differentiation between the man and the woman. The distinction in gender (male and female; man and woman) indicates that they were equal but not identical beings. The idea of the differentiation is also expressed by the order and mode of their creation in Genesis 2. It is further articulated by the fact that the specific responsibility to work (la’avod) and keep (lishmor) the Garden of Eden, as well as the specific prohibition of eating from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, were given to man, prior to the creation of the woman (Gen 2:15-17). Although these injunctions were inclusive of the woman, the biblical description singles out that Adam was the responsible leader in God’s covenant established with humankind at Creation (Os 6:7). He was the “head” of humankind and its designated leader (the headship principle), a position that would only later be fully occupied by Jesus as the Second Adam (Rom 5:12-21, 1 Cor 11:3; Eph 1:20-23; 4:15; 5:23; Col 1:13-20; 2:9-10) – see EGW, PP, 59, 67. The divine injunctions “to work” and “to keep” the Garden of Eden, in Gn 2:15, seem to imply also into a priestly function for both man and woman in the earthly sanctuary of Eden.

Most likely, it followed the type of the universal priesthood of every believer (Exod 19:5; 1Pe 2:9; Rev 1:6), in which Adam was its spiritual leader, a kind of a “high priest” in relation to his fellow priests (his wife and his future children).

2. A preeminence of male spiritual leadership is evident in the Old and New Testaments, both in the family as well as in the congregation.

Besides the covenantal headship of Adam in Genesis 2, his preeminence in spiritual leadership is also seen in his distinct accountability to God for breaking His commandment (Gen 3:10-12, 17-19), and by the fact that the ground was cursed because (ba’avur) of him (Gn 3:17). Adam held an authoritative position that brought consequences over humankind and the rest of creation. His preeminence is also found in the second part of God’s judgment upon the woman (Gen 3:16b). This complex verse must be understood in its parallel with Song 7:11[English 7:10] and Gen 4:7. In its parallelism with Song of Songs, Gen 3:16b seems to speak of God’s redemptive provision to assure in the new context of sin the original one flesh unity between man and woman. The woman’s yearning desire (f’shuqah) would be for her husband and he would rule over (mashal) her in a godly servant-like manner (as pointed out by Davidson, “Should Women Be Ordained as Pastors? Old Testament Consideration,” 17-20). On the other hand, in its parallelism with Gen 4:7, this judgment seems to speak about the kind of leadership of the father in the family, and of the firstborn son as his successor. In this case, the word chatta’t (“sin”) in Gen 4:7 is taken as a reference to a sin offering animal (see Lev 4:3, 14, 20, 24-25; etc.), and the word f’shuqah to the “will” of Abel and his relationship with Cain.

The spiritual leadership of Adam was later renewed with Noah (Gen 6:18-20; 9:1-17), Abraham (Gen 12:1-3; 15:4-6; 17:2-8; 22:16-18), the nation of Israel (Exod 4:22-23; 19:5-6; Deut 7:6; 28:9-10, 13), and with David and his promised descendent
(2 Sam 7:19; Ps 2:6-12; 18:43; 72:8-11). In the New Testament it reached its full fulfillment in Jesus as the Second Adam and the promised seed (Rom 5:12-21; 1 Cor 11:3; Gal 3:16; Eph 1:20-23; 5:23; Col 1:13-20; 2:9-10).

Male spiritual leadership in the family is evidenced by the role of the father as the head and priest of his family (Gen 8:20; 12:8; 35:1-7; Job 1:5) and by the right of the firstborn to succeed him (Gen 25:31-34; 27:37; 48:13-20). In the wider context of the community and the nation, it is seen in the Levitical priesthood (Exod 28:1-29:37; Lev 8:1-9:24); in the role of the elders of the people (Exod 24:1-11; Deut 19:11-12; 21:1-9; 22:13-19); of the judges (Exod 18:21-26; Deut 16:18; 19:17-18); of the officials/police (Deut 16:18; 29:9 [English 29:10]; 31:28); and of the king (Deut 17:14-20; 1 Sam 8-10; 2 Sam 7). In the prophetic ministry in Israel, males usually predominate from Moses to Malachi (Exod 3-4; Deut 18:15-22; Mal 1:1), but it is noteworthy that a number of women participated in this kind of spiritual leadership (as did Miriam, Exod 15:20-21; Deborah, Judg 4:4-5; and Huldah, 2 Kings 22:14).

In the New Testament, the preeminence of male spiritual leadership is seen in the role of the husband at home (Eph 5:22-33; Col 3:18-19; 1 Cor 11:3), in the leadership of the apostles, the elders and the deacons in the Church (Acts 6:1-6; 14:23; 15:6, 22; 1 Cor 12:28; Eph 2:20; 4:11; 1 Tim 3:1-13; Titus 1:5-9), and in the ministry of the prophets, the pastors-teachers, and the evangelists (Acts 13:1; 21:8; 1 Cor 12:28; Eph 4:11). There are some references to women participating in the spiritual ministry of God’s people as prophets and as deaconess (Luke 2:36-38; Acts 21:9; Rom 16:1; 1 Tim 3:11).

3. The spiritual gifts and God’s call are for everyone, men and women, so that they may be instruments of the Holy Spirit for the edifying of the body of Christ and the fulfillment of mission.

The Bible is clear that God calls everyone, men and women, to participate in His mission of redemption, in the edifying of His community of faith, and in the blessing of the world. He shows no favoritism (Deut 10:17-18; Acts 10:34-35; Gal 2:16; 3:28) and bestows His Holy Spirit to every human being who accepts His call, conceding spiritual gifts that enable man and woman to do the work. God also unites them in one body of faith in order that they may become His effective instruments in the fulfillment of His will and mission (Joel 3:1-2 [English 2:28-29]; Acts 1:13-14; 2:1-4, 16-18; 10:24, 27-28, 34-35, 44-47; 1 Cor 12:4-11, 12-26, 27-31).

The universality of God’s call and the unity of committed believers are present in the Bible since its very beginning with Adam and Eve. It is also evident in the call to Abraham and God’s covenant with him, for Sarah was equally involved too (Gen 12:5, 11-20; 13:1; 16:1-9; 17:16-17). Other examples are the “call” of Rebekah in its striking parallelism with call of Abraham (Gen 24:60 vs. Gen 12:1; 22:17); of Miriam, Moses and Aaron (Exod 15:20-21; Mic 6:4); of Deborah and Barak (Judges 4-5); of Ruth and Boaz (Ruth 3-4); of Esther and Mordecai (Esther 4-9). The New Testament presents the examples of Zechariah and Elizabeth (Luke 1:5-25); of Mary and Joseph (Mat 1:18-2:23; Luke 1:26-56); of Martha, Mary and Lazarus (Luke 10:38-42; John 11:1-46); of Priscilla and Aquila (Acts 16:14-15); of Paul and a number of women and men who collaborate with him (Roman 16:1-15; Col 4:7-17).

Male preeminence in spiritual leadership in God’s people never meant the exclusion of women from a number of important ministries in the life of Israel and the Church, and neither from the effective preaching of the Gospel to a world in need of salvation. God always gave to men and women the spiritual gifts necessary to fulfill the mission.

4. There is no clear biblical base to ordain women to the pastoral ministry.

The New Testament plainly presents the qualifications required for someone to become a bishop/presbyter/pastor (1 Tim 3:1-7; Titus 1:5-9). According to these texts, the pastoral ministry seems to belong to a distinctive area of male spiritual leadership in the Church. Faithfulness to biblical teaching predicates the need to follow this orientation. There is no clear biblical base, therefore, to ordain women to the pastoral ministry.

On the other side, however, it is also very clear in the New Testament that the pastoral ministry was only one of the different Gospel ministries that existed in the First Century Church. Ephesians 4:11-12, for example, speaks of apostles, prophets, evangelists, and pastors-teachers. 1 Corinthians 12:28-30 also gives a number of different ministries (apostles, prophets, teachers, working of miracles, gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues), and it ranks them in relation to each other.
The New Testament also mentions the ministry of the deaconate (Acts 6:1-7; Phil 1:1; 1 Tim 3:8-13). From Paul’s ranking in 1 Corinthians 12, it is evident that the ministry of the pastor-teacher was an important one in the Early Church, but not the only one, and neither the most important one. Among these different ministries, most likely, the prophetic ministry and the deaconate involved women as well as men (Acts 11:27; 13:1; 15:32; 21:8-9, 10; Rom 16:1; 1 Tim 3:11).

Since the New Testament testifies to a plurality of Gospel ministries, and this fact indicates that ministry was not reduced to the pastoral ministry only; and since women seem to have participated in more than one of these ministries, including the prophetic ministry that was one of the highest rank at the time; it would be wise that the Church should investigate the possibility of broadening its understanding of ministry in order to incorporate other forms of Gospel ministries that would include men and women alike with the full recognition of their relevance for the Church through ordination, as well as through adequate financial payment and recognition of their invested authority.

CONCLUSION:

According to these considerations, the South American Division proposes:
1. That women should not be ordained to the pastoral ministry;
2. That the Church should further investigate the possibility of the ordination of men and women to ministries other than the pastoral ministry.