9 That Ellen White supported the involvement of women in various forms of 10 ministry is well known and is not something that is debated among Seventh-day 11 Adventists. Many publications, in particular Daughters of God and some sections of 12 Evangelism,¹ have helped Adventists be more conscious of her thoughts on this 13 subject. And today women are involved in all forms of ministry in the Seventh-day 14 Adventist church. Questions arise, however, as to the level of affirmation and 15 recognition the church should give to these women in ministry. Should it be the 16 same recognition as given to men involved in the same forms of ministry?

17
18 There are not many passages to turn to in Ellen White’s writings to build a case
19 for or against the ordination of women in the Seventh-day Adventist church—there 20 is no precise “proof text” that says a woman can be ordained to become the senior 21 pastor of a church or a conference president. Hence, many other issues and 22 concepts are brought in, discussed and argued over to support the various 23 perspectives on this issue. Furthermore, so many publications have been written on 24 this subject during the last 40 years that I’m not sure any new thought or argument 25 is now possible. But for the sake of those on this Study Committee who may not 26 have read all the books and articles for and against women’s ordination I offer the 27 following thoughts and ideas.

28
29 What I would like to offer in this paper is that a careful consideration of Ellen 30 White’s thought on the role of women in the church, taken in its nineteenth-century 31 context, her understanding of the mission of the Seventh-day Adventist church, her 32 counsels regarding ministry and its many functions taken in historical context, and 33 her non-sacramental understanding of ordination and early Seventh-day Adventist 34 practice of ordination, can support the case for allowing the ordination of women 35 today. Ellen White supported the involvement of women in ministry but what is less 36 known is the historical and social contexts in which she made these comments and 37 why. Read in context, what she advocated takes on a new perspective that helps us 38 understand that she was ahead of her time in many ways but also in sync with other 39 movements that advocated giving women a more prominent role in society and in 40 the church. The perspective I draw from Ellen White’s writings encourages us to 41 move ahead and stretch out the boundaries of our understanding of ministry and 42 ordination, to step out in faith and to respond to God’s leading in the involvement of 43 women in ministry because we have a mission to finish.

1. Ellen White's Support for Women in Ministry

The Social Context

During her prophetic ministry, Ellen White not only addressed issues of doctrines and behavior to help prepare God's people for Jesus' second coming, she also addressed issues of intrinsic evil in society. In her own ways she was an advocate of reforms, a social reformer, and at times she became insistent on these reforms. She readily espoused abolitionism and even advocated social disobedience in response to the federal government's Fugitive Slave Act of 1850.² She advocated temperance, the closing of saloons and taverns, and urged women to take a strong stand against the evils of alcohol in their homes and towns.³ She advocated for health reform⁴ and education reform.⁵ Today, we benefit greatly from these reforms and we seldom think about the influence women like Ellen White had in making our society and church what it has become. To a large extent we have forgotten the social conditions in which our ancestors lived.

Early Adventists understood Paul's prophetic words in Galatians 3:28 that "there is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free man, there is neither male nor female; for you are all one in Christ" as the seed of many reforms that led to the abolition of social evils like slavery, class distinctions based on birth rights, and gender exclusion in society and church. Early Adventists were thus abolitionists, social democrats and republicans in government. Given this historical and social context, we can say that to a large extent Ellen White was ahead of her time in advocating some of these reforms. But on the other hand, she was in step

² This act created much division among the population and set the stage for civil disobedience among abolitionists and Sabbatarian Adventists. The Fugitive Slave Act imposed heavy penalties on those who refused to help government slave catchers or who obstructed the recapture of a fugitive slave. Northerners were held directly responsible for helping recapture slaves who fled to the north. Ellen White stood firmly against slavery and saw it as a moral evil. She straightforwardly advocated civil disobedience in regard to the Fugitive Slave Act. "I was shown that we have men placed over us for rulers, and laws to govern the people. Were it not for these laws, the world would be in a worse condition than it is now. Some of these laws are good, and some bad. The bad have been increasing, and we are yet to be brought into straight places. But God will sustain his people in being firm, and living up to the principles of his word. Where the laws of men conflict with God's word and law, we are to obey the word and law of God, whatever the consequences may be. The laws of our land requiring us to deliver a slave to his master, we are not to obey, and we must abide the consequences of the violation of this law. This slave is not the property of any man. God is his rightful Master, and man has no right to take God's workmanship into his hands, and claim his as his own" (Testimonies for the Church, 1:201-202).

1 with her time and advocated reforms that many other Christian groups also 2 advocated.

3
4 Also in this context is the role of women in society. In general, women had 5 little influence in American society in the nineteenth century. Women could not 6 vote. In many places they could not own property and their wellbeing often 7 depended on a faithful husband or family relations. Few received an education 8 beyond elementary school, and a very small number had a lifelong professional 9 career. Social evils were particularly hard on women. Physical and sexual abuse 10 was rampant, particularly in homes where alcoholism was a factor. Lack of 11 adequate healthcare and poor hygiene deprived women of a good life and frequently 12 caused the death of the mother and/or child in childbirth.

13
14 On the other hand, Ellen White was fortunate and blessed to have been 15 raised in a good Christian home, with a devoted believing father who did not drink 16 alcohol, and a mother who cared deeply for her family's spiritual and physical needs 17 and provided them with an education. She knew first-hand the blessings to the 18 parents, children, and by extension to the community, that such a home brings. In 19 her own home, she replicated what she saw her parents do when she was a little 20 girl. Ellen White understood the important role a godly woman could have in the 21 home, in the community, and in the church.

22
23 Knowing the context of Ellen White's statements regarding the roles of 24 women in society and in the church helps us also to define a clearer portrait of Ellen 25 White and her influence, and why she advocated these ideas. Today we have 26 become familiar with many aspects of the roles of women in society and in the 27 church, and we don't think about what life was like a hundred and fifty years ago.
28 We read Ellen White's statements about women in ministry and we give an 29 affirmative nod not realizing that when she stated these ideas she was perceived as 30 pushing the boundaries of normalcy and even the boundaries of decency and 31 propriety. Many men were not happy with her promotion of these ideas and many 32 turned to the Bible to find arguments against the involvement of women. If today 33 we have women in ministry as teachers, evangelists, pastors, administrators, 34 treasurers, and chaplains, it is in part because Ellen White advocated for these roles 35 in the church. And as a church we have followed her lead for over 130 years. Shall 36 we go back on that history and undo this encouragement to women in ministry?

37 38 39 Women Speaking in Religious Meetings

40 41 As I've mentioned, a century ago women were not as involved in social or 42 religious public life as they are today. In fact, it was sometimes an inappropriate 43 novelty to see a woman speak in an assembly. Let's remember that Ellen White's 44 first attempts in 1845 and 1846 at communicating the content of her first visions to 45 groups of former Millerites were met with worrisome displeasure from her family.
46 A single woman was not supposed to travel in those years, and even less speak in

1 religious assemblies, unless she was accompanied by a family relation. It was felt 2 unbecoming of her to do this and her behavior caused her family to be concerned 3 about her reputation.⁶

4
5 Later in her life, Ellen White became very involved in the temperance 6 movement in the United States. She became known as a good speaker at 7 temperance rallies and drew large crowds of curious people who, in part, wanted to 8 hear a woman speak. By the end of the nineteenth century it was still a novelty to 9 hear a woman speak in public.⁷ Many people objected to see women speak at 10 religious meetings on the basis of Paul's two admonitions in 1 Corinthians 14:34-35 11 and 1 Timothy 2:12.

12
13 Two interesting anecdotes from Ellen White's ministry illustrate a few 14 aspects of this context of women speaking in public and how she personally 15 surmounted the resistance to her public ministry. In October 1870, during a tour of 16 churches in the Midwest, James and Ellen White stopped at a gathering in Tipton, 17 Indiana. In letters to her sons, Willie and Edson, she recounted her meeting with 18 two Methodist women who came to hear her.

19 20 Tuesday afternoon [October 11] we left the encampment at Tipton. At 21 the depot we were accosted by two ladies, members of the Methodist church, 22 who had come for the purpose of speaking with me. One had been brought 23 up a Friend, and still retained her "thee" and "thou." Both seemed to have 24 had an experience in the things of religion. They were much pleased with my 25 discourse Sunday afternoon. They, with other Christian women in the place, 26 believed that woman can exert a powerful influence by public labor in the 27 cause of God; but a large class, including the ministers of the several 28 denominations, held that she was entirely out of her place in the desk.

29 On learning that I was to speak at the campground, both parties 30 determined to go and hear me, agreeing that if I proved myself able to 31 expound the Scriptures to the edification of my hearers, the ministers should 32 cease their opposition to woman's speaking, and, on the other hand, if my 33 remarks failed to be edifying, the ladies would accept the ministers' views 34 upon the point.

35 These two ladies came to the meeting feeling that much was at stake.
36 Said they, "We prayed earnestly that God would give you freedom and the 37 power of His grace; and our expectations were more than realized. God 38 helped you to speak. Such an impression was made on this community as 39 was never known before. You have told us truths of which many were 40 ignorant. All will have matter for serious thought. Prejudice against 41 woman's speaking is gone. If the people had known that you would speak to 1 the public, any of the churches in the place would gladly have opened their 2 doors to you." These Christian women then urged us to stay and speak again, 3 but we told them it was impossible. They also invited us to come to the 4 Methodist camp meeting next year, promising us a good hearing. They then 5 bade me Godspeed, and we parted.⁸

6

7 Ten years later, in a letter to her husband James, Ellen White recounted some 8 of the activities she and other colleagues had been involved in near Oakland, 9 California. Among many things, she told James the following.

11 Elder Haskell talked in the afternoon and his labors were well received. I had 12 in the evening, it was stated, the largest congregation that had ever 13 assembled at Arbuckle. The house was full. Many came from five to ten and 14 twelve miles. The Lord gave me special power in speaking. The 15 congregation listened as if spell-bound. Not one left the house although I 16 talked above one hour. Before I commenced talking, Elder Haskell had a bit 17 [piece] of paper that was handed (him) in quoting [a] certain text prohibiting 18 women speaking in public. He took up the matter in a brief manner and very 19 clearly expressed the meaning of the apostle's words. I understand it was a 20 Cambelite [sic] who wrote the objection and it had been well circulated 21 [among the audience] before it reached the desk; but Elder Haskell made it 22 all plain before the people.⁹

23

24 These anecdotes illustrate a few important concepts for our discussion of 25 women in ministry. First, it was a novelty in both Indiana and California to see a 26 woman speak on religious matters and many people felt it was inappropriate. Yet, 27 Ellen White noted that the attendance at both meetings was good, and in California 28 the house was full and no one left the meeting even though she spoke for a long 29 time. We should note as well that she did not see it as her task to argue with people 30 who felt otherwise. She left the responsibility of defending her public ministry to 31 others.

32

33 In both anecdotes, Ellen White refers to the opposition against having a 34 woman speak and suggests that this opposition was at times biblically based. At the 35 California meeting, she referred to a note being circulated in the congregation from 36 a "Cambelite," that is a member from the Church of Christ of the restorationist 37 Stone-Campbell movement, who quoted a certain text of scripture about women 38 being prohibited from speaking in public. We are not told what that text was but we 39 can guess that it was either 1 Corinthians 14:34-35 or 1 Timothy 2:12. Christians in 40 the Stone-Campbell movement viewed these two texts as straightforward facts 41 about women, without any need to interpret or understand Paul's context. They 42 viewed Paul's admonition "let your women be silent" as a fact to be obeyed at all

⁸ Ellen G. White to Edson and Emma White, October 17 (Letter 16a), 1870; Ellen G. White to W. C. White, October 17 (Letter 16), 1870.

1 times and in all places. Two basic rules of interpretation that guided their study of 2 the Bible — doing only what is specifically commanded or practiced in the New 3 Testament, and paying attention to concrete words, not abstract principles or ideas 4 — prevented the founder of their movement, Alexander Campbell, from 5 condemning slavery during the American Civil War (because the New Testament 6 says nothing against slavery), but caused him to condemn women preachers
7 (because the New Testament says women should be silent). In contrast, Adventists 8 condemned slavery and encouraged women preachers.¹⁰

9
10 Ellen White mentioned to James that Stephen Haskell responded briefly to 11 this “Cambelite” objection before she spoke and “very clearly expressed the meaning 12 of the apostle’s words.” And it is obvious from the context that Ellen White 13 concurred with this explanation.

15 What did Stephen Haskell say to this audience? What was his belief on this 16 subject of women speaking in church or in public, of women doing ministry? What 17 was his explanation that Ellen White agreed with? Through the 1860s and 1870s, a 18 number of articles appeared in Adventist church publications, the Review and Herald
19 and Signs of the Times, on this topic of women speaking in religious meetings.
20 Having a woman prophet who spoke regularly in church assemblies and in public 21 meetings was bound to raise some questions in regards to these two key texts of the 22 New Testament, particularly also in the context that the Adventist and Stone-23 Campbell movements were in constant interactions in the Midwest in the 24 nineteenth century. Three articles on this subject were published in 1879, during 25 the year before this anecdote took place in Ellen White’s ministry.

26
27 In January 1879, J. N. Andrews published a short article on women speaking 28 in church in the Review and Herald. In this article, Andrews seeks to explain the two 29 main texts used to prohibit women from speaking in church. His purpose is to show 30 that a careful study of these texts cannot support this conclusion. In reference to 1 31 Corinthians 14:34-35, he explained that Paul’s intent was to avoid confusion in the 32 church and to urge women to stop chatting between themselves during the worship 33 service. Hence, “what the apostle says to women in such a church as this, and in 34 such a state of things, is not to be taken as directions to all Christian women in other 35 churches and in other times, when and where such disorders do not exist.” In 36 regards to 1 Timothy 2:12, Andrews understands “this text to give Paul’s general 37 rule with regard to women as public teachers. But there are some exceptions to this 38 general rule to be drawn even from Paul’s writings, and from other scriptures.” In ¹⁰ See Gerry Chudleigh, “The Campbellite and Mrs. White,” Pacific Union Recorder, (112:7) July 2012, 6. One of my doctoral students, Wendy Jackson, professor at Avondale College in Australia, is completing a dissertation comparing Alexander Campbell and Ellen White’s views of church unity. Her study is a fascinating comparison of their biblical hermeneutics and doctrine of the church.

1 fact, the evidence Andrews goes on to give indicates that this general rule is rather 2 the exception and that women are free to labor in ministry.¹¹

3
4 A few months later that same year, Andrews again published a brief article 5 on this subject, this time in Signs of the Times. In response to an article he had read 6 in another paper, which stated that women were not allowed to speak in early 7 Christian churches, he explained that such a position did not concur with the 8 testimony of the Old and New Testaments, and that Paul's remark in Galatians 3:28 9 was responsible for the "diffusive benevolence of Christianity" to counter the 10 degradation that women had been subjected to in non-Christian societies. "The 11 number of women of whom honorable mention is made for their labors in the 12 gospel is not small. Now, in view of these facts, how can any man in this age of Bibles 13 say that the Bible does not notice women, or give them a place in the work of God?
14 The Lord chooses his own workers, and he does not judge as man judges. Man looks 15 at the appearance; God judges the heart, and he never makes mistakes."¹²

16
17 One other article published before Ellen White's anecdotal event in California 18 is an article published by her husband in the Review and Herald. While explaining 19 the text in 1 Corinthians 14, James White conceded that Paul may have referred to 20 women participating in church business meetings but he took the firm position that 21 this text did not refer to a prohibition for women to participate in worship services.
22 Rather "Paul ... places men and women side by side in the position and work of 23 teaching and praying in the church of Christ." White also gave numerous examples 24 of women who ministered for God in the Old and New Testaments to show that 25 there is no such prohibition for women to labor for the gospel or to speak in church 26 assemblies.¹³

27
28 The articles published in Adventist papers in this period took the position 29 that what Paul referred to in 1 Corinthians 14 and 1 Timothy 2 had to do with 30 particular situations in the local churches of his time. Paul's counsel regarding these 31 situations was not applicable to all church congregations. Adventist pioneers did 32 not understand Paul to be enouncing a general and universal ban on women 33 speaking in religious meetings. Many of these articles also referred to many of 34 Paul's female co-workers to state the obvious conclusion that Paul was therefore not 35 speaking against women in ministry. Furthermore, none of these articles used the 36 argument that a woman prophet (i.e. Ellen White) has a special dispensation from 37 God to speak in church – an argument that is repeatedly used today to circumvent 38 the misunderstood prohibition and to argue that women without a prophetic call 39 from God should not be engaged in public speaking in religious meetings.

12 J. N. Andrews, "Women in the Bible," Signs of the Times, October 30, 1879, p. 324.

13 James White, "Women in the Church," Review and Herald, May 29, 1879, p. 172.

1 Somehow the history of our interpretation of these passages has been 2 forgotten: one of our church founders was a woman and she spoke extensively in 3 congregations. If this was the position taken by our church leaders 130 years ago in 4 an era when women did not have social equality, I believe they would certainly 5 favor women in ministry today and would see no reason to not include women in 6 pastoral and other forms of church ministry. It is in this context that Ellen White 7 encouraged women to be involved in many aspects of ministry because she 8 genuinely believed that God calls women to ministry just as much as He calls men.

9
10 I also find it interesting that in her 70 years of ministry Ellen White never 11 referred to or commented on 1 Corinthians 14:34-35 or 1 Timothy 2:12 to limit the 12 ministry women can do in the church or society. Perhaps her silence speaks 13 volumes as to the importance we should give to these two passages.

14 2. The Meaning and Extent of Ministry

16
17
18 Another area of discussion is the level of involvement of women in church 19 work and ministry. Can a woman do all the same activities or functions a man can 20 do? Are there prohibitions, like the concept of male headship¹⁴ and Paul’s 21 admonitions in his epistles, to the extent a woman can work for God in connection 22 with church ministry? That leads us to ponder what Ellen White meant by ministry 23 and a number of statements she penned while she lived in Australia in the 1890s are 24 very instructive.

26 In 1898, Ellen White spoke quite forcibly about the need to remunerate fairly 27 the spouses of pastors who do team ministry. Even if some men may not have felt 28 comfortable with women doing ministry in partnership with their husbands and be 29 remunerated for it, she argued, “this question is not for men to settle. The Lord has 30 settled it.” She went on to say that God is calling women to engage in ministry and 31 in some instances they will “do more good than the ministers who neglect to visit 32 the flock of God.” Emphatically she stated, “There are women who should labor in 33 the gospel ministry.”¹⁵

34
35 This statement immediately raises a question: what did Ellen White mean by 36 “ministry”? Some argue that when she uses the word ministry in reference to men it 37 refers to the gospel ministry of an ordained minister, and when she uses the word in ¹⁴ Ellen White spoke in favor of male headship in the home but did not transfer this concept to the church or society. Furthermore, she based her thoughts on male headship in the home on the result of the fall of Adam and Eve, and not on the order of the creation of Eve after Adam. See Patriarchs and Prophets, 58-59. If the concept of male headship is rooted in the creation order before the fall, then it becomes a permanent status and invariably applies to all men and women in the church and society.

¹⁵ “The Laborer Is Worthy of His Hire,” Manuscript 43a, 1898, in Manuscript Releases, 5:324-327.

1 reference to women it refers to other kinds of supportive ministry, like personal 2 evangelism, visiting homes of the poor, teaching the Bible, or canvassing. I 3 personally don't think such a clear distinction is entirely justified because the 4 meaning of ministry changed in the first decades of the Adventist church and so did 5 the practice of ordination and who received ordination. In the early decades of 6 Adventist work, only the itinerant preacher, or evangelist, was ordained, and he was 7 referred to as an ordained minister or "gospel minister." Ministry in that time
8 period was focused on the work of the evangelist. With time, however, other kinds 9 of tasks or functions became part of what ministry consists of. The work of Bible 10 workers, literature evangelists, educators, publishing house editors and workers, 11 and other administrators began to be included in the work of ministry for the 12 church. And men in these functions, who at first were not ordained, started to be 13 ordained. These changes and developments need to be part of our understanding of 14 the context in which Ellen White wrote her words of encouragement to women in 15 ministry.¹⁶ Her encouragements to women help us see this change in the Adventist 16 understanding of ministry, from a narrow meaning to a broad inclusion of many 17 functions, and she consistently encourages women to join in all aspects of ministry.
18 Her encouragements are inclusive and broad.

20 In 1879, Ellen White addressed a difficult situation at the South Lancaster 21 church in Massachusetts. She felt the ministers working in that church or in the area 22 had not been good leaders. One pastor had "a disposition to dictate and control 23 matters." Knowing there were "humble, devoted women" in that congregation who 24 had been sneered at by these ministers, she made this comment: "It is not always 25 men who are best adapted to the successful management of a church. If faithful 26 women have more deep piety and true devotion than men, they could indeed by their 27 prayers and their labors do more than men who are unconsecrated in heart and in 28 life."¹⁷ In this early statement the ministry ordained ministers do includes 29 management of a church and, in her opinion, women can have that ministry and be 30 just as effective at it as men. Obviously, this statement does not call for the 31 ordination of women but it is the beginning of a pattern in Ellen White's writings 32 where we see her responding to some situations by inviting the leaders of the 33 church to consider asking women do the work, or part of it, that ordained men do.
34 This division of labor is for Ellen White conducive to facilitating the mission of the 35 church.

¹⁶ I am grateful for insights I received from Denis Kaiser, a doctoral student at Andrews University, who has done recently a study of the development of rite of ordination and concept of ministry in the Seventh-day Adventist church from 1850 to 1920. His study was commissioned by the Inter-European Division of Seventh-day Adventists. Denis Kaiser, "Setting Apart for the Ministry: Theory and Practices in Seventh-day Adventism (1850–1920)," paper prepared for the Biblical Research Committee of the Inter-European Division, March 18, 2013; slightly revised May 13, 2013.

¹⁷ Ellen G. White to Brother Johnson, n.d. (Letter 33), 1879, in Manuscript Releases, 19:56 (emphasis added).

1 Always close to Ellen White’s heart was the work of literature evangelists, 2 selling books filled with truth to those who were not acquainted with the three 3 angels’ messages. In 1880 she stated that literature evangelism was a good 4 preparation for the work of ministers. “If there is one work more important than 5 another, it is that of getting our publications before the public, thus leading them to 6 search the Scriptures. Missionary work—introducing our publications into families, 7 conversing, and praying with and for them—is a good work and one which will 8 educate men and women to do pastoral labor.”¹⁸ In this context, she refers to 9 ministry as “pastoral labor” and both men and women can prepare for it through 10 literature evangelism.

11
12 Another similar inclusive encouragement to prepare for ministry through 13 literature evangelism comes twenty years later. “All who desire an opportunity for 14 true ministry, and who will give themselves unreservedly to God, will find in the 15 canvassing work opportunities to speak upon many things pertaining to the future, 16 immortal life. The experience thus gained will be of the greatest value to those who 17 are fitting themselves for the ministry. It is the accompaniment of the Holy Spirit of 18 God that prepares workers, both men and women, to become pastors to the flock of 19 God.”¹⁹ This statement encourages both men and women to prepare themselves for 20 ministry as pastors of churches.

21
22 One more statement from 1903.

23
24 The Lord calls upon those connected with our sanitariums, publishing 25 houses, and schools to teach the youth to do evangelistic work. ... Young men 26 and young women who should be engaged in the ministry, in Bible work, and 27 in the canvassing work should not be bound down to mechanical 28 employment. ... Some will be trained to enter the field as missionary nurses, 29 some as canvassers, and *some as gospel ministers.*²⁰

30
31 In the last three statements, Ellen White particularly encourages young 32 people to prepare themselves for ministry. Although she may have been aware that 33 there would be limitations to what young women could do or be employed for by 34 the church, she did not limit the options available to them. If somehow Ellen White 35 believed that the concept of male headship restricts the ministry positions available 36 for women, she had plenty of opportunities to clarify her thought. She never did.
37 Instead, her encouragements to young women are consistently open-ended and 38 inclusive as in this next statement in 1887.

39
40 While discussing the need to provide good, solid education to Adventist 41 youth in our schools, she exhorted ministers, Sabbath School teachers and college

1 teachers to do their best to “unite heart and soul and purpose in the work of saving 2 our youth from ruin.” The standard of education should not be lowered because 3 “when suitable men are wanted to fill various positions of trust, they are rare; when 4 women are wanted with well-balanced minds, with not a cheap style of education, 5 but with an education fitting them for any position of trust, they are not easily 6 found.”²¹

7 A careful reflection of Ellen White’s writings reveals another pattern in her 8 counsels regarding the involvement of women in ministry: her counsels are also 9 directed at women of all age groups over an entire lifespan. As we have just seen 10 some of her counsels are addressed to young women and invite them to prepare 11 themselves for ministry through good education and practical experience as in 12 literature evangelism. Some counsels are addressed to mothers and earnestly 13 entreats them to regard their homes as the greatest missionary field.²² Other 14 counsels are addressed to older men and women inviting them to even consider 15 doing missionary work in areas where the gospel has not been preached.²³ And 16 some counsels are directed at married women and spouses of ordained ministers.²⁴ 17 While the home of a married couple can be blessed with children, sometimes the 18 arrival of children may not be what is most desirable for that couple or for their 19 ministry.²⁵ For some women, Ellen White went so far as to recommend they 20 postpone having children in order to allow them many years of useful gospel 21 ministry as she favored ministerial and missionary teams of husband and wife. We 22 will see the example of one such couple below in the last section of this paper.
23

24 In October 1899, Ellen White restated her conviction that women engaged in 25 ministry should be paid adequately for their work. In this document it is not clear 26 whether she is referring also to the spouses of ordained men, as she did in 1898, but 27 her statement is nonetheless emphatic.
28

29 Women, as well as men, are needed in the work that must be done. Those 30 women who give themselves to the service of the Lord, who labor for the ²⁵ In 1898, Ellen White had this to say regarding the adoption of children by ministers’ families. “Letters have come to me from several, asking my advice upon the question, Should ministers’ wives adopt infant children? Would I advise them to do this kind of work. To some who were regarding this matter favorably, I answered, No; God would have you help your husband in his work. The Lord has not given you children of your own; His wisdom is not to be questioned. He knows what is best. Consecrate your powers to God as a Christian worker. You can help your husband in many ways. You can support him in his work by working for him, by keeping your intellect improved. By using the ability God has given you, you can be a home-keeper. And more than this, you can help to give the message” (Manuscript 43a, 1898, in Manuscript Releases, 5:325).

1 grounded upon her beliefs that the dual purpose of the church is to spread the 2 gospel and to prepare the world for the coming of Jesus Christ; therefore, forms of 3 Christian ministry should be adaptable to the current needs, while remaining 4 grounded on biblical principles, and include all Christians in active service.
5 Understanding what Ellen White identified to be the purpose for the church and the 6 meaning of the rite of laying on of hands is important for our discussion.

One of Ellen White's basic ideas regarding the church is that it is the representative of God on earth.²⁸ Within the context of the great controversy theme, she believed that Christians are the instruments that God uses to witness to the universe that He is a God of love, mercy, and justice.²⁹ "God has made His church on the earth a channel of light, and through it He communicates His purposes and His will."³⁰ In this context, her comments about the church emphasize the pragmatic functions of the church, its role and purpose. Although ordained ministers, as servants of God and of the church, are no doubt to act as God's representatives on earth,³¹ they are not the only ones. Every Christian has a role to play within the great controversy at the end of time and is a representative of Christ.³² Indicative of her thoughts on this is the following passage written in 1904:

Brethren and sisters, how much work have you done for God during the past year? Do you think that it is those men only who have been ordained as gospel ministers that are to work for the uplifting of humanity? — No, no! Every one who names the name of Christ is expected by God to engage in this work. The hands of ordination may not have been laid upon you, but you are none the less God's messengers. If you have tasted that the Lord is gracious, if you know his saving power, you can no more keep from telling this to some one else than you can keep the wind from blowing. You will have a word in season for him that is weary. You will guide the feet of the straying back to the fold. Your efforts to help others will be untiring, because God's Spirit is working in you.

²⁹ Testimonies for the Church, 6:12.

³⁰ The Acts of the Apostles, 163. Two chapters, in particular, clearly present her understanding of the purpose of the church: "God's Purpose in the Church," Testimonies for the Church, 6:9-13, and "God's purpose for His Church," The Acts of the Apostles, 9-16.

³¹ One good example of this is the chapter "A Consecrated Ministry" in The Acts of the Apostles, 359-371.

³² "A Preparation for the Coming of the Lord," Review and Herald, November 24, 1904 (emphasis added).

1 While in the Old Testament only certain men ordained to the priesthood 2 could minister within the earthly sanctuary,³³ Ellen White believed that no one is 3 ever restricted from serving God even though one is not an ordained minister. All 4 Christians, regardless of their vocations, are servants of God and in a very broad 5 sense all Christians have a ministry. Even though she never mentioned it as such, 6 she nonetheless affirmed the Protestant concept of the priesthood of all believers.
 7 Two passages of Scripture are foremost in her understanding of this concept. The 8 first is 1 Peter 2:9, “But you are a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, 9 God’s own people, that you may declare the wonderful deeds of him who called you 10 out of darkness into his marvelous light” (RSV).³⁴ The second is John 15:16, “Ye 11 have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and 12 bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of 13 the Father in My name, He may give it you.” Many times she referred to or quoted 14 parts of these passages in support of dedicated Christian service and to insist that all 15 Christians are called, commissioned or ordained by God to serve Him.³⁵

16
 17 This concept of the priesthood of all believers underlies her understanding of 18 both Christian service and ordination. Throughout her ministry, Ellen White made 19 repeated appeals to church members to engage in wholehearted Christian service.
 20 According to her, it is a fatal mistake to believe that only ordained ministers are 21 workers for God and to rely solely on them to accomplish the mission of the 22 church.³⁶ “All who are ordained [i.e. baptized] unto the life of Christ are ordained 23 [i.e. called] to work for the salvation of their fellow-men.”³⁷ “Those who stand as 24 leaders in the church of God are to realize that the Saviour’s commission is given to 25 all who believe in His name. God will send forth into His vineyard many who have 26 not been dedicated to the ministry by the laying on of hands.”³⁸ In a very real sense, 27 every Christian is thus a minister for God.³⁹

28
 29 Consequently, Christ calls and spiritually ordains every Christian for 30 ministry. Emphatically, Ellen White asked, “Have you tasted of the powers of the ³³ See Ellen White’s comments in connection with the rebellion of Korah in Patriarchs and Prophets, 398-399.

³⁴ Three centuries before Ellen White, Martin Luther also appealed to 1 Peter 2:9 to express his belief that every Christian is a priest for God. In a 1520 treatise, in which he invited the German princes to reform the church, he wrote, “The fact is that our baptism consecrates us all without exception, and makes us all priests” (An appeal to the ruling class of German nationality as to the amelioration of the state of Christendom in John Dillenberger, ed., Martin Luther: Selections from his writings (New York: Doubleday, 1962), 408).

1 world to come? Have you been eating the flesh and drinking the blood of the Son of 2 God? Then, although ministerial hands may not have been laid upon you in 3 ordination, Christ has laid His hands upon you and has said: ‘Ye are My 4 witnesses.’”⁴⁰ Thus, she could state, “many souls will be saved through the labors of 5 men who have looked to Jesus for their ordination and orders.”⁴¹ Church 6 ordination, therefore, is not a prerequisite to serve God because it is first the Holy 7 Spirit who gives fitness for service to Christians who in faith are willing to serve.⁴²

8
 9 I believe this is how she also understood her own call to ministry. Although 10 she was never ordained as a minister by the Seventh-day Adventist church, she 11 believed that God himself had ordained her to her prophetic ministry, a spiritual 12 ordination that was by far superior to any forms of human ordination. In her later 13 years, while recalling her experience in the Millerite movement and her first vision, 14 she stated, “In the city of Portland, the Lord ordained me as His messenger, and here 15 my first labors were given to the cause of present truth.”⁴³

16
 17 From these passages we can draw two initial conclusions concerning Ellen 18 White’s underlying thoughts on ordination. First, Ellen White’s concept of the 19 priesthood of all believers is the fundamental qualification for Christian service; 20 every Christian is intrinsically a servant of God. Second, in a spiritual sense, God 21 ordains every Christian to service.

22 23 24 The Ordination of Paul and Barnabas

25
 26 A number of passages in Ellen White’s writings give us significant thoughts 27 on the meaning of ordination and in all of them the primary focus of the discussion 28 is the role ordination plays in furthering the evangelistic mission of the church.
 29 These passages include her commentary on the ordination of Paul and Barnabas in 30 Acts 13.

31
 32 God foresaw the difficulties that His servants would be called to meet, and, in 33 order that their work should be above challenge, He instructed the church by 34 revelation to set them apart publicly to the work of the ministry. Their 35 ordination was a public recognition of their divine appointment to bear to the 36 Gentiles the glad tidings of the gospel.

37 Both Paul and Barnabas had already received their commission from God 38 Himself, and the ceremony of the laying on of hands added no new grace or 39 virtual qualification. It was an acknowledged form of designation to an

1 appointed office and a recognition of one's authority in that office. By it the 2 seal of the church was set upon the work of God.

3 To the Jew this form was a significant one. When a Jewish father blessed 4 his children, he laid his hands reverently upon their heads. When an animal 5 was devoted to sacrifice, the hand of the one invested with priestly authority
6 was laid upon the head of the victim. And when the ministers of the church 7 of believers in Antioch laid their hands upon Paul and Barnabas, they, by that 8 action, asked God to bestow His blessing upon the chosen apostles in their 9 devotion to the specific work to which they had been appointed.

10 At a later date the rite of ordination by the laying on of hands was greatly 11 abused; unwarrantable importance was attached to the act, as if a power 12 came at once upon those who received such ordination, which immediately 13 qualified them for any and all ministerial work. But in the setting apart of 14 these two apostles, there is no record indicating that any virtue was imparted 15 by the mere act of laying on of hands. There is only the simple record of their 16 ordination and of the bearing that it had on their future work.⁴⁴

17
18 Some significant insights about ordination appear in this story. First, Ellen 19 White acknowledged that there is a calling and spiritual appointment before the 20 church ordains someone, and ordination is a public recognition of this prior divine 21 appointment. This, we have already seen, concurs with her understanding of the 22 spiritual ordination of all believers. Second, she also stated that the rite of 23 ordination does not in itself qualify someone for an office or task, this qualifying has 24 already happened through the work of the Holy Spirit in one's life and ministry; 25 rather, ordination is to be understood as a form of appointment to an office and a 26 recognition that this person is given the authority to perform that office. Third, 27 ordination is also a rite during which the congregation asks "God to bestow His 28 blessing upon the chosen apostles". Fourth, ordination is for a specific work and is 29 not meant to "immediately" qualify someone "for any and all ministerial work."⁴⁵

⁴⁴ The Acts of the Apostles, 161-162 (emphasis added).

⁴⁵ There is much confusion regarding the meaning of an office in Scripture and the writings of Ellen White. This passage indicates that an office, like that of the apostles Paul and Barnabas, is related to a function, task or work. The office of apostle is for a specific work in the church, and in the case of Paul and Barnabas it was to preach the gospel to Gentiles. Her comment, "At a later date the rite of ordination by the laying on of hands was greatly abused; unwarrantable importance was attached to the act, as if a power came at once upon those who received such ordination, which immediately qualified them for any and all ministerial work", seems to indicate again that someone's ordination should not be understood as necessarily qualifying this person for other future tasks he may be asked to perform. Rather, ordination is for a specific task. This comment invites some reflection on the Seventh-day Adventist practice of ordaining someone for life for any and all ministerial functions someone may be asked to perform thereafter. Traditionally, one's ordination to Seventh-day Adventist ministry has served as an initiation rite that qualifies one to perform all future tasks of ministry, including pastoral ministry, evangelism, teaching, leadership and administration. This ordination also remains valid in retirement even if the minister no longer functions in a ministry role.

1 This implies there is room for various kinds of laying on of hands, for various kinds 2 of work, ministry, functions or offices, each with specific responsibilities and,
3 therefore, attending authority.

4
5 In this context, as we will see below, it is now possible to understand why 6 Ellen White allowed for the church to decide whether some people, other than 7 gospel ministers or itinerant preachers, could be ordained by the laying on of hands 8 for other ministries. If one allows for a missionary understanding of the role of the 9 church, then ordination is also a functional rite to affirm and commission individuals 10 for various ministries and responsibilities that further the mission of the church.
11 There is a world to be warned and a people to be prepared for the second coming of 12 Christ, and those who are thus spiritually qualified should be entrusted with their 13 mission, affirmed and blessed by the church's laying on of hands.

14 15 16 Ordination of Early Adventist Ministers

18 Very early in Seventh-day Adventist history, the leading pioneers of the 19 movement felt concerned about the confusion and false teachings that were 20 manifested sometimes among the small group of Sabbatarian Adventist believers.
21 Following the example of New Testament apostles who had set apart elders to 22 oversee local congregations against false teachings and to administer the ordinances 23 of baptism and the Lord's Supper, these early Adventist leaders selected promising 24 men and set them apart with prayer and laying on of hands. The criterion for their 25 ordination was the "full proof" evidence "that they have received their commission 26 from God". By ordaining them the group of believers "would show the sanction of 27 the church to their going forth as messengers to carry the most solemn message 28 ever given to men."⁴⁶ The ordination of these early Adventist itinerant preachers 29 served as a rite to authorize them to speak on behalf of the church and to preserve 30 order in the emerging church.

31 32 33 Ordination to Other Forms of Ministry

34
35 Ellen White earnestly believed that the ordained pastoral ministry alone was 36 not sufficient to fulfill God's commission, that God is calling Christians of all 37 professions to dedicate their lives to his service.⁴⁷ Since the church can acknowledge 38 different kinds of spiritual gifts and ministries beyond those of pastor, elder and 39 deacon to meet the needs of the people, she favored the setting apart of trained 40 professionals, including medical missionaries and those who today would be 41 referred to as chaplains and social workers, by the laying on of hands. Among these ⁴⁶ Early Writings, 100-101. It is interesting to note that in this passage Ellen White does not use the word ordination, but rather refers to this rite as a setting apart and a commission. This indicates that she uses these words and concepts synonymously.

⁴⁷ Medical Ministry, 248-249.

1 groups of ministers, and given a broader definition of what ministry is, would be 2 women who are engaged in personal evangelism. Strictly speaking, these two 3 recommendations do not have biblical precedents but they are possible given her 4 understanding of ministry and ordination.

5
6 In 1908, in a manuscript to encourage the mission of Adventist medical 7 institutions, Ellen White wrote about the need for cooperation between gospel 8 workers and medical doctors in Adventist medical institutions. Her desire was to 9 see the medical work of the church as the right arm of the church's evangelistic 10 efforts, and she understood that pastors and medical workers were both essential to 11 this work. She considered the work of the medical profession as a great means for 12 proclaiming the gospel and, for this reason she believed medical missionaries ought 13 to be set apart for God's service. In respect to this, she wrote:

14
15 The work of the true medical missionary is largely a spiritual work. It 16 includes prayer and the laying on of hands; he therefore should be as 17 sacredly set apart for his work as is the minister of the gospel. Those who are 18 selected to act the part of missionary physicians, are to be set apart as such.
19 This will strengthen them against the temptation to withdraw from the 20 sanitarium work to engage in private practice.⁴⁸

21
22 Ellen White believed that the work of the medical profession is a ministry for 23 proclaiming the gospel. She saw a correlation between the setting apart of the 24 medical missionary and the minister of the gospel and viewed the ceremony of the 25 laying on of hands upon medical missionaries to be a form of ordination. In this 26 ceremony, as with ordination to the more traditional offices of the church, the 27 church acknowledges the blessings of God upon the medical profession and its 28 practitioners, and this recognition by the church serves to strengthen the dedication 29 of the worker in his or her service for God.

30
31 In a similar context, in 1895, Ellen White wrote a long article about the work 32 of lay people in local churches. She urged ministers to let lay people work for the 33 church and train them to do so. And she favored that women serving in local 34 ministry also be set apart for the evangelism they do, a work that today would be 35 identified with Bible workers, chaplains and social workers. She counseled:

36
37 Women who are willing to consecrate some of their time to the service of the 38 Lord should be appointed to visit the sick, look after the young, and minister 39 to the necessities of the poor. They should be set apart to this work by prayer 40 and laying on of hands. In some cases they will need to counsel with the 41 church officers or the minister; but if they are devoted women, maintaining a 42 vital connection with God, they will be a power for good in the church. This is ⁴⁸ Manuscript 5, 1908, in Evangelism, 546 (emphasis added).

Here Ellen White counseled that God is leading the church in setting apart women for these various forms of ministry. It is God's will for the church to branch out, be strengthened and built up by ordaining women and men to serve in the various forms of gospel ministry and to provide care for the mental, physical and spiritual needs of others. Her understanding of ministry is broad as is her understanding of ordination. Ordination in this context is both asking God's blessing on the individuals and affirming their ministry for the church.

Some have argued that since Ellen White does not use the word ordination in these two examples it should not be implied that she is referring to ordination to ministry, but that she refers only to a kind of spiritual affirmation of some lower types of ministry, like the work of deaconesses in local churches. While this may have been the case in her day, today in most Adventist churches these three types of ministry she mentions are usually done by ordained male pastors or elders, depending on the size of the congregation.

In both examples, Ellen White uses the same words Luke used in Acts 13 to describe Paul and Barnabas' ordination: they were set apart with prayer and laying on of hands. (By the way, Luke does not use the word ordination either.) In her reflection on the ordination of the first Sabbatarian Adventist ministers, she does not use the word ordination but refers to setting apart and commissioning; yet, we naturally accept that she is referring to ordination. If Ellen White can describe these events as ordinations, we can certainly say her reference to medical missionaries and women being set apart with prayer and laying on of hands are also referring to ordination. What matters here is not whether one event is an ordination and the other is not, on the basis of the presence or absence of the word ordination in her writings; they all refer to the same rite of laying on of hands. Instead of limiting our understanding of what ordination is and for whom it is valid, we need to broaden our understanding to include a variety of meanings and circumstances as Ellen White invited us to do. And, furthermore, her comment regarding the ordination of medical missionaries is obviously stating that in her mind there is only one kind of laying on of hands: "he [the medical missionary] therefore should be as sacredly set apart for his work as is the minister of the gospel." All these comments give us the picture that Ellen White that her non-sacramental and functional use of the word ordination is better described by the words affirmation and commissioning than by the sacramentally loaded word ordination. Thus, with this context and meaning in mind, her view of the laying on of hands can be and is gender inclusive.

These two statements also support what we saw earlier, that for Ellen White ministry is to be understood in broad terms and cannot be limited only to the work

⁴⁹ "The Duty of the Minister and the People," Review and Herald, July 9, 1895, (emphasis added).

1 of an itinerant preacher or church pastor. Earlier, in our discussion of her 2 comments about the need to have more women join ministry with their husbands 3 and her invitation to women to be educated for ministry, her statements are clear 4 that whether one is preaching a series of evangelistic meetings or giving a sermon
5 on Sabbath morning, giving Bible studies in homes, or visiting families in need, all 6 these activities are qualified as gospel or pastoral ministry. She invited and urged 7 both men and women to be involved in ministry. She understood that these women 8 “are recognized by God as being as necessary to the work of ministry as their 9 husbands.”⁵⁰ Consequently, she approved of their labor in the gospel ministry, 10 noting: “Again and again the Lord has shown me that women teachers are just as 11 greatly needed to do the work to which He has appointed them as are men.”⁵¹ Ellen 12 White urged the church to recognize God’s call to women by the laying on of hands 13 so that the ministry of the church might be more diversified and complete in both its 14 message and its mission. This picture is also framed in the context of mission. She 15 was passionate about the salvation of the lost and she felt strongly that all Adventist 16 men and women be active in all facets of ministry. While her concern was 17 missiological (accomplishing the mission of the church), ours has become 18 ecclesiological (determining who has authority in the church).

19
20 Some may consider these thoughts somewhat radical and a rupture with the 21 New Testament teaching on the ordination of deacons, elders, and pastors.
22 However, what allowed Ellen White to see the laying on of hands in this broader 23 sense is her non-sacramental, functional view of ordination. Although it symbolizes 24 the giving of church authority, ordination is not primarily for the purpose of 25 granting authority—in our denomination, church assemblies, committees, and 26 boards do this. Ordination affirms the spiritual gifts God has given to a person and 27 invites God’s blessings on this person’s ministry. Such an affirmation is in her view 28 inclusive of males and females and is not to be limited to the ministries of deacons, 29 elders, and pastors. The organization of the church is to be adaptable to the needs 30 of the church wherever it is located in the world so that all may hear the message of 31 God’s salvation in his or her own language and culture. Ordination and the laying on 32 of hands is a means to bless people in ministry and to encourage them to do their 33 ministry with the church’s affirmation. She did not view ordination as a sacrament 34 to be given to only to a few men in the church, who form a cohort or caste of 35 spiritually endowed ministers, and who have sole authority to lead the church.

36
37 One more anecdote further illustrates Ellen White’s non-sacramental view of 38 ordination. In 1873, John Tay joined the Seventh-day Adventist church and soon felt 39 called by God to volunteer his time as a missionary in the South Pacific. In 1886, he 40 landed on the island of Pitcairn and succeeded by God’s grace in converting the 41 entire population. But not being an ordained minister, he was not authorized to ⁵⁰ Manuscript 43a, 1898, in Manuscript Releases, 5:323.

⁵¹ Ibid., 5:325.

1 baptize the people on the island who accepted the three angels' messages.⁵² Ten 2 years later, Ellen White commented on this event and had this to say.

3
4 Another thing I want to tell you that I know from the light as given me: it has 5 been a great mistake that men go out, knowing they are children of God, like 6 Brother Tay, [who] went to Pitcairn as a missionary to do work, [but] that 7 man did not feel at liberty to baptize because he had not been ordained. That 8 is not any of God's arrangements; it is man's fixing. When men go out with the 9 burden of the work and to bring souls into the truth, those men are ordained 10 of God, [even] if [they] never have a touch of ceremony of ordination. To say 11 [they] shall not baptize when there is nobody else, [is wrong]. If there is a 12 minister in reach, all right, then they should seek for the ordained minister to 13 do the baptizing, but when the Lord works with a man to bring out a soul 14 here and there, and they know not when the opportunity will come that these 15 precious souls can be baptized, why he should not question about the matter, 16 he should baptize these souls.⁵³

17
18 It is an interesting comment for Ellen White to say that the idea that only an 19 ordained minister can perform baptism, even in special circumstances, "is not any of 20 God's arrangement; it is man's fixing." Perhaps she overstated her response to what 21 happened. But nonetheless, there is something in her understanding of ministry 22 and ordination that leads her to say this. In this case, ministry is viewed as non-23 hierarchical and ordination is viewed as an affirmation of God's prior spiritual 24 ordination. Her passion for saving the lost is strong and human church limitations 25 on what a layperson can do should not hinder the salvation of souls. If there are 26 such limitations, even as to prevent baptism in the absence of an ordained minister, 27 they are "man's fixing."

28
29 Admittedly, and to be fair, she did support the broader principle of unity and 30 church order and agreed that ordination functions as a rite to show that ministers 31 receive authority to work for the church. But if ordination is seen as a way to 32 establish some hierarchy to keep lay people in their lower places, it is obvious here 33 that she did not support such a view. She objected to the idea that only ordained 34 ministers can represent the church as their exclusive rights and function. Clearly, in 35 her mind, the link between ordination and granting church authority is somewhat 36 fluid and ordination is more akin to a commissioning to do God's service for the 37 church.

⁵² In 1879, the General Conference voted that "none but those who are Scripturally ordained are properly qualified to administer baptism and the other ordinances." G. I. 4. Context and Hermeneutics

The question of the ordination of women is also a question of hermeneutics and how we understand the relevance and authoritative nature of the writings of Ellen White on this issue. I have attempted so far to present her broad understanding of ministry with multi-faceted functions and tasks, and her broad understanding of ordination as a function of the church to affirm and commission men and women to various forms of ministries and responsibilities. These views of ministry and ordination open avenues that the traditional Catholic sacrament of ordination cannot allow.

It is true that Ellen White did not specifically say that women could be ordained to become senior pastors of churches or conference presidents. But the interpretation of her writings must be done within the circumstances and times she wrote. In the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, women in general did not occupy leadership functions in churches and society. However, she encouraged women to be active in a multitude of functions and ministries, and believed that with the proper education, women could occupy “any position of trust”.⁵⁴ Therefore, to limit our current practices to only what the church allowed in her day is not automatically in agreement with her thought.

The interpretation of Ellen White’s testimonies and writings cannot be static because we must understand the times and circumstances that led her to say what she did, and learn from them principles to guide our thinking and actions today. A statement written many years ago may not necessarily have the same force and relevance today as it did then. Attempting to explain how to use her writings, she stated in 1911 that the context of her thought is very important: “Regarding the testimonies, nothing is ignored; nothing is cast aside; but time and place must be considered.”⁵⁵

An example of this is the question of the proper age for school entrance—an idea debated among Adventists a hundred years ago. In 1872, Ellen White had written that “parents should be the only teachers of their children until they have reached eight or ten years of age.”⁵⁶ Many Adventists took this statement as an unvarying rule for the age of entrance into Seventh-day Adventist schools and when in 1904, upon their return to the United States, her son W. C. White and his wife Ethel wished to enter their young children in the newly established school in St. Helena, California, the school administration refused to take their children on the basis of Ellen White’s statement. When she was asked about this, however, she explained that when this counsel was given there were no Adventist schools yet and her counsel had specific reference to the “common” [public] schools. Children younger than 9 or 10 were not prepared to discern and resist the temptations they

1 would meet in the public schools. As the Adventist school system became more 2 extensive, she advised students of all ages to attend Adventist schools wherever 3 they were available.⁵⁷ She advised using “common sense” in this regard and not to 4 make her comments on entrance age an unbending rule and thus miss the 5 underlying principle.⁵⁸

6 7 8 The Ordination of Some of Our Pioneers 9

10 This anecdote illustrates that we must take carefully into consideration the 11 historical context of Ellen White’s writings before coming to any conclusions. One 12 very human tendency is to superimpose our current understanding of issues on 13 prior statements in the writings of Ellen White. Let me illustrate one major problem 14 I see happening today: through the years we have changed our practice regarding 15 the ordination of men but we have not been willing to do the same for women.
16

17 George I. Butler became president of the Iowa Conference in June 1865 even 18 though he had “no experience as a preacher.” It was not until June 1867, that he 19 received a ministerial license, and then ordained later that year in September.
20 “Interestingly,” notes Denis Kaiser, “even after he had been elected conference 21 president, the church saw no need to hurry his ordination, as they apparently did 22 not see it as necessary prior to him beginning his service as president.”⁵⁹ Similarly, 23 Uriah Smith became editor of the Review and Herald in 1855, secretary of the 24 General Conference in 1863, and president of the Michigan Conference also in 1863, 25 a position he served in intermittently until 1872. He was not ordained until 1874.
26

27 Early Seventh-day Adventists ordained only the ministers among them who 28 had given evidence that they were good evangelists or itinerant preachers.
29 Ordination was a recognition of their gifts and that the church authorized them to be 30 spokesmen for the truth. Those who were not itinerant preachers were not 31 ordained even if they served the church in some capacity. As we grew in numbers 32 and diversified our ministries, the role of ministers changed and those who had 33 responsibilities in the church were also ordained, irrespective of whether they had 34 been itinerant preachers. So our practice of male ordination has evolved since the 35 time of Ellen White to be more inclusive of other male forms of ministry.
36

37 The ordination of W. W. Prescott in 1889 is an illustration of that 38 development. Prescott had never worked as a pastor or evangelist, yet during his 39 service as president of Battle Creek College and education secretary of the General 40 Conference, church leaders noticed the fruits of his educational work and his 41 powerful preaching abilities. They were convinced of his divine calling and decided

1 to ordain him in 1889. He counseled with Ellen White about his doubts and whether 2 he should accept ordination. “If he could serve the cause of God any better in 3 receiving ordination and credentials,” she surmised, “it would be best” for him to be 4 ordained.⁶⁰

5
6 We should note that the elections of Butler and Smith to their functions 7 would likely not be allowed today with our current church policies. But, in all 8 honesty, that is not an entirely fair historical judgment or interpretation. If Elders 9 Butler and Smith were working for the church today, they would have been 10 ordained by the time they were asked to serve in their functions or would be 11 ordained immediately upon being voted into a function. Our times and practices are 12 different from those of our pioneers and we cannot make direct comparisons and 13 links. We can learn from the past but our present is different. Who receives 14 ordination today is based on our current understanding of ministry and it is 15 different from what our pioneers understood ministry to be and thus who can be 16 ordained. This also indicates that as we age we are following in the footsteps of 17 many other denominations, and we are giving more and more attention to church 18 structures and ecclesiastical roles, to who has authority within a hierarchy. Our 19 pioneers did not have this preoccupation at first.

20 21 If this is what has happened with the development of the practice of 22 ordination for men in ministry, how about the development of the practice of 23 ordination for women in ministry? Why should such a development remain 24 stagnant? In 1895, Ellen White recommended the ordination of women who were 25 involved in visiting the sick, looking after the young, and ministering to the 26 necessities of the poor. Even though some have argued that this ordination referred 27 to the limited role of a deaconess in Ellen White’s day, men who do the same 28 functions today are now ordained as ministers or elders. In the 1860s and 1870s, 29 men who did these same activities in local churches would also have been ordained 30 as deacons. But now they are ordained as elders and ministers. Should we not 31 ordain women as ministers or elders as well if they do the same functions as their 32 male counterparts? If it is possible to allow for the development of the practice of 33 ordination for men, why not allow the same for women? These are serious 34 questions that must take into consideration the historical context of Ellen White’s 35 writings and our own current context.

36
37 If Ellen White was so willing to encourage women in various forms of 38 ministry in the 1890s and 1900s, in a society and context in which women were not 39 encouraged to do so, it is because she believed in a broad gender inclusive ministry 40 to warn a dying world of Christ’s soon coming. While she was not concerned with 41 the women’s rights movement of her day, she was concerned about all Seventh-day 42 Adventists joining together to spread the gospel. And today to limit what women

2 her day or on the basis of the limited options for ministry she offered women in 3 those years is taking her comments out of context, a context in which she 4 encouraged progressive and innovative approaches to ministry. Rather than 5 limiting ordination to men only, her comments open the door to women being 6 ordained as well.

In March 1916, a few months after Ellen White died, her secretary C. C. Crisler received a letter from a sister Cox in Texas asking him for Ellen White's opinion and counsel regarding the ordination of women as referred to in the Review and Herald article of July 1895.⁶¹ Although he did not presume to interpret what Ellen White meant, he ventured to say that "this article published in the Review does not refer to the ordination of women as ministers of the gospel, but rather touches upon the question of setting apart, for special duties in local churches, God-fearing women [as deaconesses] in such churches where circumstances call for such action." He added that "Sister White, personally, was very careful about expressing herself in any wise as to the advisability of ordaining women as gospel ministers. She has often spoken of the perils that such general practice would expose the church to by a gainsaying world; ... This is not suggesting, much less saying, that no women are fitted for such public labor, and that none should ever be ordained; it is simply saying that so far as my knowledge extends, Sister White never encouraged church officials to depart from the general customs of the church in those matters."⁶²

Crisler's comments are interesting in a number of ways. First, he refrains from using the word ordination to refer to this action, calling it simply, as Ellen White did, a setting apart and thus attributes much to the absence of the word ordination in this counsel. He also describes these women as doing the work of deaconesses in some local churches where they would be set apart. This in itself would show that these women were undertaking a new kind of ministry not performed heretofore by the average deaconess. Another comment that stands out is Crisler's opinion that Ellen White did not encourage church officials to depart from the church's general customs on this practice and that she was concerned about what people would say regarding such an uncommon practice. Ellen White was careful that the church not expose itself to "a gainsaying world." Although he may have been privy to some information we no longer have, there is no evidence that Ellen White counseled church leaders not to ordain women ministers. Also Crisler believed that the ordination of women to ministry had not been on Ellen White's agenda because she was afraid of what the world would say or that some churches would use this new practice as a way of disparaging the Seventh-day Adventist message.

⁶¹ See our discussion of this article on pp. 18-19 above.

⁶² C. C. Crisler to Mrs. L. E. Cox, March 12 and 22, 1916, in Daughters of God, 253-255.

1
2 Crisler’s depiction of Ellen White’s hesitant role or soft advocacy in some 3 issues is accurate. While she was an uncompromising reformer on some social 4 issues (e.g. temperance and education), in some other areas, she was soft spoken, 5 not willing to raise opposition for the sake of it. When advocating a particular style 6 of reform dress in the 1850s, she encountered some opposition and ridicule that 7 made her back away from her advocacy. On this issue she was careful and 8 measured, and did not wish the health reform message be hijacked by a 9 secondary issue. Her funny-looking reform dress was finally discarded not because 10 it was not a good idea, but because it was too radical for some people. People made 11 fun of it and discarded her counsels. What mattered was for women to be better 12 dressed; the style and shape of the dress was secondary. The same can be said of 13 her advocacy for the involvement of women in ministry. She was not interested in 14 displacing men from the traditional roles they have had in the family, church and 15 society. Her thought naturally implies that because of their family and social roles, 16 husbands/fathers will tend predominantly to work outside the home and will be 17 more numerous in leadership roles, while wives/mothers will tend to care for the 18 home and children, and have less involvement in church and society. However, this 19 traditional arrangement did not prevent some women from occupying various 20 positions of ministry, even administrative positions, during Ellen White’s time.⁶³

21
22 Given the social and family constraints of her time, it is still remarkable that 23 Ellen White was able to recommend that more women be involved in active ministry 24 and in spreading the gospel. If there was ever an ideal social and family structure it 25 is likely the one we see in her writings. But times have changed tremendously.
26 Today, in the United States, the ideal family model of a father working outside the 27 home to supply his family’s needs while the mother stays home to care for the 28 children is becoming very rare. One-income families have a hard time to survive in 29 our economic conditions and lifestyle expectations. What we find instead in our 30 churches are more and more family units of single parents, multi-generational 31 families, and blended families. Single women (never married, divorced or widowed) 32 form a large segment of our congregations. In our context, Ellen White’s appeals for 33 the involvement of more women in all forms of ministry are even more relevant and 34 significant. Our context begs for more women in ministry.

35
36 The fact that Ellen White was able to recommend the setting apart of medical 37 missionaries and women involved in ministry indicates that the church should be 38 open to more women in ministry. The ordination of women in the Adventist church 39 is thus possible because she understood ordination as a prayer of divine blessing, as 40 a form of affirmation of one’s spiritual gifts, and as a commissioning. In fact, we 41 have already been ordaining women to ministry: we call it commissioning. Based on ⁶³ Many studies have shown the involvement of women in various forms of ministry during Ellen White’s time. Beverly Beem and Ginger Hanks Harwood, “Your Daughters Shall Prophesy”: James White, Uriah Smith, and the “Triumphant Vindication of the Right of the Sisters to Preach,” Andrews University Seminary Studies, 43:1 (2005), 41-58.

1 Ellen White’s understanding of ordination we can conclude there is no difference 2 between the two rites, they are one and the same. The setting apart by laying on of 3 hands and prayer is a means to commission someone to ministry. The church 4 decides what authority comes along with that ministry, what the ministry is, and the 5 person’s qualification to perform it. It is not the rite of ordination that determines 6 these factors.

9 5. Allowance for Diversity

10 11 One last area of theological reflection on Ellen White’s writings I’d like to 12 offer is regarding the allowance for diversity of thoughts, opinions and practices she 13 advocated in her life and ministry. We have a history of allowance for diversity 14 within the Seventh-day Adventist church.

15
16 This year marks the 125th anniversary of the 1888 General Conference 17 session in Minneapolis, Minnesota. What we remember most about this session is 18 the acrimonious debates before and during this session. Two “major” issues were 19 argued over: the identity of the law Paul referred to in Galatians 3:24 and the 20 identity of the ten northern European tribes that fulfilled the end of the prophecy of 21 Daniel 7. Some leaders and pioneers of our church felt the Seventh-day Adventist 22 church could not change its teachings on these. Others felt it behooved Adventists 23 to be faithful to Scripture and history and provide more accurate interpretations of 24 these two passages.

25
26 Both sides of these controversies wished for Ellen White to provide the 27 definitive interpretation and thus close the debates. But she refused to do so and 28 she objected to such a use of her writings. Instead she pleaded with the delegates to 29 study their Bibles and to come to some conclusions by themselves. In the end she 30 commented that these two issues were not key, “landmark” doctrines of the 31 Seventh-day Adventist church and diversity of opinions was possible. What 32 mattered most for her was the exhibition of a proper, cordial and gentle spirit 33 among the delegates and unity in the mission of the church.⁶⁴

34 Another such argument occurred around 1910 regarding the interpretation 35 of the word “daily” in the prophecy of Daniel 8:11-13. Again, people appealed to 36 Ellen White’s writings to settle the issue and again she refused to do so. She did not 37 believe this issue was a “test question” and did not think her writings provided an 38 exegetical interpretation of the passage. Like the other controversies in 1888, her

⁶⁴ Ellen G. White to “Brethren,” August 5 (Letter 20), 1888, in 1888 Materials, 38-46. A short summary of the issues discussed at the session is A. V. Wallenkampf, What Every Adventist Should Know About 1888 (Washington, DC: Review and Herald, 1988)

1 main concern was directed toward the disunity, the rancor, the time spent in debate, 2 and the distraction from evangelism.⁶⁵

3 I find these two controversies give us a paradigm for the use of Ellen White's 4 writings in the interpretation of Scripture and they also show that her concern was 5 primarily with church unity and mission rather than focusing on dividing, secondary 6 issues. I cannot but muse about what she would say today regarding our use of her 7 writings to muster support for one or the other side of our ordination debate. In the 8 end, I learn also from these discussions that Ellen White allowed for diversity of 9 thought for questions that she felt were secondary and not key doctrinal beliefs of 10 our church.

11
12 Many other examples of allowance for diversity could be given. We could 13 reflect on the church's teaching on vegetarianism and the importance Ellen White 14 gave it, even that eating of meat must ultimately be discarded at the end of time, yet 15 allowed for flexibility and personal choices.⁶⁶ I have already alluded to the age of 16 school entrance and who can perform baptisms in special circumstances. We could 17 talk about the crucial role of a mother in the home in raising and caring for her 18 children,⁶⁷ yet she herself allowed for exceptions and, for five years, gave the 19 responsibility of raising her first son Henry to a trusted family while she and her 20 husband preached the three angels' messages. She did not feel good about this, but 21 understood God called her to make this sacrifice.⁶⁸ To some extent, personal 22 circumstances and contexts allowed for exceptions and differences of opinions and 23 practices.

24
25 I understand that allowing for exceptions may not be considered a good thing 26 because there's a strong tendency among Adventists to call for uniformity of beliefs 27 and practices. Sometimes we tend to do this when it comes to secondary issues and 28 beliefs. At the same time it is difficult to pigeonhole Ellen White when it comes to 29 the behavior of others. There seems to be exceptions to hard-core rules: goals, 30 values, and ideals are taught, but often displaced by or accommodated to the 31 realities of life.

32
33 When it comes to the assigned ideal role of women in family, church and 34 society, there are ideals that she taught, and then sometimes there is the reality of a 35 particular circumstance and context. One of Ellen White's most prominent 36 teachings, as we have seen, is her insistence that both men and women be involved 37 in evangelistic ministry, but children in the home can interfere with the woman's 38 ministry. One such example is the case of Isaac and Adelia Van Horn who were 39 married by James White in 1865. Soon after their marriage they went as a pioneer

1 missionary couple to Washington and Oregon. Ellen White was disappointed when 2 they began to have children for this interfered with their joint ministry.⁶⁹ Many 3 years later, she reminded them of James’s words at their wedding:

4
 5 I remember the words of my husband when you were sent into this 6 new field. They were these: “Isaac and Adelia, God would have you 7 enter this new field together unitedly in the work. I would not trust 8 you, Isaac, alone where you might lack in the financial working of the 9 cause. Adelia will help you out with her business tact where you 10 would be more inclined to be easy and not thorough in the work.
 11 Adelia will be your good [partner] to spur you up to energy. Both of 12 you will make a perfect whole. God would have Adelia in the field. He 13 would have you work side by side together, for this, the Lord has 14 shown, was His will. We can afford to pay you better wages, with 15 Adelia to help you, than for your labors alone. The Lord will bless you 16 together.”⁷⁰

 18 Ellen White then continued, writing to Isaac, “God did not ordain that you should 19 take Adelia out of the field. God did not ordain that you should accumulate family 20 cares to take yourself out of the field.” However we interpret this situation, Ellen 21 White desired for both Isaac and Adelia to be involved in ministry, and Adelia’s 22 talents were particularly needed in this missionary context. Ellen White felt the Van 23 Horns had not been true to their calling by having children so soon after they 24 entered ministry together. Exceptions to the ideals of a family home are sometimes 25 needed.

26
 27 Some people build intricate schemes of interpretation of the writings of Ellen 28 White to categorize the goals, ideals and values that she espoused regarding women 29 in general and to impose a limit on what women can do in the church today. There 30 are those who advocate that families, church life and society today should be 31 following the same arrangements that Ellen White experienced in her day, or 32 witnessed in her visions and wrote about in her writings. This grand scheme and 33 ideal is sometimes based on an understanding of the relationship between the 34 persons of the Godhead, that Jesus was submitted to the Father and thus implying 35 there is an intrinsic value for some people in church and society to be submitted to 36 others. The same goes with the ranking and hierarchy of angels in heaven.⁷¹

⁶⁹ Ellen G. White to Isaac and Adelia Van Horn, (Letter 48) 1876, in Daughters of God, 138-140.

⁷⁰ Ellen G. White to Isaac Van Horn, February 26 (Letter 8), 1884.

⁷¹ Such a scheme leads most readily to an Arian view of the divinity of Christ. Ellen White believed in the eternal equality of all three persons of the Godhead. Here’s a sample of her thoughts: “This Saviour was the brightness of His Father’s glory and the express image of His person. He possessed divine majesty, perfection, and excellence. He was equal with God” (1869; Testimonies for the Church, 2:200). “Before the entrance of evil, there was peace and joy throughout the universe. . . . Christ the Word, the only begotten of God, was

2 Ellen White saw all these beautiful and inspiring scenes of angels in her 3 visions. She wrote about the order and harmony she saw in heaven which gave her 4 reasons for advocating order and harmony in the early Seventh-day Adventist 5 church organization.⁷² Yet she urged the involvement of all people in church life, 6 rebuked those elected and ordained to work for the church who used a form of 7 kingly power to get what they wanted and to displace others from participating in 8 the life of the church. She decried the use of power and authority on the basis of 9 one's hierarchical standing in the church; no one has an intrinsic rank or importance 10 that positions him as superior to others. While she affirmed leadership positions to 11 facilitate the good and proper operations of the church, and to avoid anarchy, 12 confusion, and false teachings, a form of hierarchicalism that displaces, supplants or 13 controls others is not condoned in her writings. And she never used any of these 14 concepts to limit what women can do in the church.

15
16 In any social organization, including churches, there is a conservative 17 element that prevents developments that appear to remove traditional ways of 18 doing things. For many, it is fine to leave things as they are. But there is also a 19 progressive element that wishes to see things change in order to see progress when 20 things begin to stagnate. So there's a tension between traditionalist tendencies and 21 progressive tendencies. Neither is bad. But an organization must look carefully at 22 its past and not idolize it or fossilize it if the organization is to continue to be 23 relevant in its constantly-changing context.

24
25 As I see it, the mission of our church has been for over 150 years to preach
26 the three angels' message to the world and to prepare a people for Christ's soon 27 return. To that end and for that purpose, Ellen White understood that all Seventh-28 day Adventists must be involved in this mission, both men and women, lay people 29 and ordained pastors, young and old – all have a role to play in this grand mission.
30 Throughout her ministry she encouraged and urged men and women to be involved.

31
32 As I see it also, the inclusion of women in ministry will only facilitate the 33 completion of our mission. To think that only ordained men can do some of this 34 work, or that only men can have a place or role to play in the accomplishment of 35 some parts of this mission, is to me a traditionalist approach to our mission that will one with the eternal Father,--one in nature, in character, and in purpose,--the only being in all the universe that could enter into all the counsels and purposes of God. By Christ, the Father wrought in the creation of all heavenly beings. . . . and to Christ, equally with the Father, all Heaven gave allegiance" (1888; The Great Controversy, 1888 ed., 493). "He [Christ] was with God from all eternity, God over all, blessed forevermore. The Lord Jesus Christ, the divine Son of God, existed from eternity, a distinct person, yet one with the Father. He was the surpassing glory of heaven. He was the commander of the heavenly intelligences, and the adoring homage of the angels was received by Him as His right" (1906; Review and Herald, April 5, 1906).

⁷² Early Writings, 97.

1 only hinder what we are about. I don't think Ellen White would approve of this in 2 this day and age in many parts of the world. Maybe she would say we are hindering 3 the role and ministry of women by refusing them to be ordained, and that it is unfair 4 to have them do all the work and not have the blessing of the church to do so. She 5 said the same thing about the unfairness of the pay scale for women while she lived 6 in Australia. Her own life and ministry allowed for diversity of opinions on many 7 questions and issues. She allowed for exceptions to some rules or ideals when the 8 context demanded them.

9
10 In 1892, she stated, "We cannot then take a position that the unity of the 11 church consists in viewing every text of Scripture in the very same light. The church 12 may pass resolution upon resolution to put down all disagreement of opinions, but 13 we cannot force the mind and will, and thus root out disagreement. These 14 resolutions may conceal the discord, but they cannot quench it and establish perfect 15 agreement."⁷³

19
20 In this paper I have attempted to build from Ellen White's writings and her 21 context a theological framework to understand first what ministry and ordination 22 are and then how it can allow for the ordination of women. This framework is built 23 on what she believed to be the role and mission of the church, that all Christians 24 have a role to play in fulfilling this mission, and that women have an essential role in 25 the church.

26
27 We find many insights in her writings regarding what she understood 28 ordination to mean. First, all believers are spiritually ordained by God to participate 29 in the mission of the church. This is the fundamental qualification for Christian 30 service; every Christian is intrinsically a servant of God. This does not supersede 31 the specific roles of church officers and pastors, but it indicates that ministry is 32 inclusive. This spiritual ordination goes so far as to allow any Christian to baptize 33 someone when special circumstances demand it.

34
35 Significant insights about ordination appear in Ellen White's commentary on 36 the story of the ordination of Paul and Barnabas in Acts 13. First, she acknowledged 37 that there is a calling and spiritual appointment before the church ordains someone, 38 and ordination is a public recognition of this prior divine appointment. Second, she 39 also stated that the rite of ordination does not in itself qualify someone for an office 40 or task, this qualifying has already happened through the work of the Holy Spirit in 41 one's life and ministry, and through a good education; rather, ordination is to be 42 understood as a form of appointment to an office or a task and a recognition that 43 this person has the authority to perform that task. Third, ordination is also a rite

⁷³ "Love, the Need of the Church," Manuscript 24, 1892, in Manuscript Releases, 11:266.

1 during which the congregation asks God to bestow His blessing upon the chosen 2 person. Fourth, ordination is for a specific work and is not meant to “immediately” 3 qualify someone “for any and all ministerial work.” This implies there is room for 4 various kinds of laying on of hands, for various kinds of work, ministry, functions or 5 offices, each with specific responsibilities and, therefore, attending authority.

6
7 Ellen White’s recommendation that there be an ordination for medical 8 missionaries and women in ministry is based on her understanding that gospel 9 ministry is a broad activity and not limited to what pastors do for the church. In 10 these recommendations, which do not find their precedent in Scripture, she invites 11 the church to broaden its understanding of ministry and compares the ordination of 12 medical missionaries to that of a pastor. In this context, Ellen White understood 13 ordination as a form of affirmation or commissioning. Thus, with this context and 14 meaning in mind, her view of the laying on of hands can be and is gender inclusive.
15 All these insights lead us to see that Ellen White understood ordination as an 16 ordinance at the service of the church to commission people in various kinds of 17 ministry and responsibilities, and to ask God’s blessing on their ministry. There is 18 no indication in her writings that the rite of ordination should be limited only to 19 men or that it should be used to establish some kind of church hierarchy. She never 20 referred to some key texts like 1 Corinthians 14:33-35 or 1 Timothy 2:12 to limit the 21 ministry of women in the church. Theological concepts like male headship in the 22 church, the subordination of Jesus to the Father or the hierarchy of angels in heaven 23 are never used in her writings to prevent women from some forms of ministry that 24 would be only accessible for men. She emphatically encouraged the involvement of 25 women in all forms of ministry.

26
27 Ellen White allowed for diversity of thought and practice in many areas of 28 personal and church life, in beliefs and behavior. I think we are all in agreement 29 that ordination is not a key, fundamental belief of the Seventh-day Adventist church.
30 In that case, we can allow for differences of opinions and practices. Instead of 31 dividing ourselves over this issue, we should go forward with the mission of our 32 church.

33
34 It seems to me that the core of our current discussion is whether women in 35 ministry should have the same authority as men have. In many functions, they 36 already do and we commission (ordain) them to do so. Based on Ellen White’s 37 writings, interpreted within her context, we have followed her lead and, according 38 to our various cultural and national circumstances, have given women the 39 opportunities to serve in a multitude of ministry functions. The question now is 40 whether these women could be given the authority to perform a few more tasks 41 (ordain church elders, organize or disband churches, serve as conference 42 presidents). My reading of Ellen White’s writings leads me to ask a simple question: 43 why not? Why should we not give women in ministry the authority to do these 44 other tasks? Why can we not trust women to be as competent in these other 45 functions? I think Ellen White would still say that competent women can be given 46 “any position of trust” and be set apart for them.
