Frederick Cairnes Gilbert

Frederick Carnes Cohen was born on September 30, 1867, in London, England, to Falk and Miriam Cohen (1825-1883) Falk Cohen apparently used the surname “Albersmith” as well), both of Jewish ethnicity and strict adherents of Orthodox Judaism. Married at a young age in Suwalki, Poland, then a territory of the Russian Empire, the Cohens experienced virulent anti-Semitism there, and fled to Germany in hopes of a more tolerant atmosphere. The persecution was severe there too, and after a very brief stay the couple migrated to England. At last in Britain the Cohens found tolerance and even prosperity for those of their ethnicity, as represented in the political career of the popular Jewish Prime Minister Benjamin Disraeli. In England the Cohens had eight children.

Frederick had a strict Orthodox Judaic upbringing, being trained by a rabbi in the Talmud Torah, having a bar-mitzvah, donning phylacteries, and even entertaining a career as a rabbi. Because of the persecution that his parents and ancestors received at the hands of Christians, as well as the instruction he received in school, Frederick was unusually strident in his

AUTHORS
Lisa Clark-Diller
Professor Diller graduated as a Southern Scholar from Southern Adventist University and received her Ph.D. from the University of Chicago in Early Modern History. She enjoys reminding students that not only was the world not always the way it is now, but that humans could have made choices that would have resulted in very different outcomes. We still have choices as we “make history.”

The Great Controversy Project
"The results of the circulation of this book [The Great Controversy] are not to be judged by what now appears. . . . A much larger number who read it will not take their position until they see the very events taking place that are foretold in it"
(Ellen G. White, Manuscript 11, 1890).
